

Happy Labor Day

Linda Levine
September 2009

As we near Labor Day weekend, a lot of people start to think about the end of summer, how to catch the last warm days. I started to think about what Labor Day really means.

After googling “what Labor Day means”, there were several sites that gave an appropriate answer. Answers.com said, “The first Monday in September, observed as a holiday in the United States and Canada in honor of working.”

Labor Day has actually been celebrated since the 1880’s! I didn’t know that. Did you?

But, the whole point is that we work hard all year. We have one day to celebrate ourselves and the effort we put forth, to make our lives, and the lives around us, a better place.

I would like to thank David Gussin for his effort in making our lives a lot easier. Because of his efforts, there are many places available to meet like-minded people. There are meetings and events all over the place now. And it really wasn’t like that before he made the commitment to get involved. So, thanks, again, to 516ads.com and 631ads.com.
